Good Evening Ms. Maeder,

I decided to apply for this position because I would love to shift the focus of my career from customer-oriented work towards the world of scientific research. I find this position particularly intriguing because it fits very well both my area of expertise (professional web development) and my interests (physics, R&D, international environment). I feel that I can contribute a lot through my expertise while expanding my knowledge in new directions at the same time.

I find a particular resonance in your search of someone experienced with both frontend frameworks and backend API development, appreciation for Continuous Integration, love for quality and experience with Open Source. I believe you will find my interest and experience in performance optimisation quite relevant, as well as my thesis work on a spectrogram written in C++.

Another aspect that will probably be valuable to you is my eagerness to teach other people what I know with complete openness: I trained many interns and junior developers, and I'm always available to those who need guidance.

On a more personal level, I'm a Swiss citizen, I've lived in Italy for many years and I speak Italian, French, English and some German (B1 level and learning). I currently live in Oerlikon with my daughter and my girlfriend and work at a small web agency in Wallisellen. Although I'm quite happy with my job, it doesn't allow me to support my family as well as I would like. Since I'm in no rush to leave, I would do so only for a position that truly excites me.

Should you find my profile interesting, don't hesitate to contact me for an interview. I can be quite flexible time-wise with a proper advanced notice. You can reach me by phone (079 635 28 61) or by e-mail (stephane.bisinger@protonmail.com) at any time you find convenient.
